arge Quantity of Honey Discovered A remarkable discovery was recently ade at the Cathnys yard of the Tall Vale Railway Company. A large elm tree, grown in Gloucestershire, was being cut up into timber, when, right in the very heart, a cavity measuring eight feet by seven and a half inches in diameter was discovered almost completely filled with the comb of the honey together with a squirrel's skull. No means of access to the hollow was discoverable, neither was decay anywhere coverable, neither was decay anywhere apparent, and around the cavity itself no less than fifty "rings," each ring denoting a year's growth, were counted, the outer bark being, too, without a flaw. The hollow was of uniform size throughout, and presented the appearance of having been bored with an auger and, great though its dimensions were, it was practically filled with the comb, proving that the bees must have been in passession for several years. Empty combs of the queen bee also showed that they had been swarmed.

An Old Historical dighway New in the comparative Disase.

One of the most interesting links in this country between the past and the present is the old National turnpike from Baltimore to the Ohio River. Half a century ago this was the great avenue of travel and commerce between the East and the West, but since the introduction of railroads it has lost its importance, and has gradually fallen, if not into decay, at least into something too much like neglect. might lead his pursuers straight to the selected cleft or hollow, and, in getting him out, they could searcely fail to discover other contents of the lair. In one instance this really did occur. A gentleman, having concented a watch and some valuable diamonds in a small hollow tree, was startled, on reconnoitring the place a few days later, to find that the tree had not only been felled, but actually split open. He had given up his property for lost, when he happened to spy it buried in the leaves, where it had dropped as the trunk was rent asunder. Fortunately, the sable hunter had been too eager after his quarry to have an eye for anything else.

Results of Disabedience. Some years ago the Rothschilds held a large quantity of cotton in New Orleans, which they instructed their agent in that city to sell when cotton should reach a certain price. The agent, believing that the price of cotton would go beyond the figure named by his employers, held on till he was able to sell it at a price which netted forty thousand dollars more than he would have got for it if he had obeyed his orders from London. He joyfully informed his employers of his success, supposing they would share his satisfac-tion at the result. Imagine his surprise and chagrin when he received a reply,

I found that ice up and down saying, in substance:
The forty thousand dollars you made the same portion of my body to burn, by disoboying your instructions is not your successor, starts for New Orleans to day."

The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, and sary. The next man dog I got up cared. " doing will whatever you do.
